ITALIAN MURDERER IS HIDING IN MOUNTAINS

Slayer of Dominick Giancippio is Keeping Under Cover.

SAID TO BE INJURED

Sheriff Hurley Believes Man Who Stabbed Companion on Sunday Evening is Being Secretly Aided by Friends—Has Bad Record.

That Carmen Ventro, the murderer of Dominick Giancippio, is hiding in the mountains near Bellefonte until an opportunity presents itself for him to get to New York and there take a boat for Italy, is the belief of Sheriff Hurley and other officials working on the case. Ventro, it now develops, was wounded before he stabbed Giancippio and it is supposed that he is keeping under cover, with the assistance of friends, until his wounds heal and he is able to travel without exciting suspicion.

A trail of blood spots showing the route taken by Ventro was discovered by the police. It led a distance of several hundred feet from the scene of the crime. There the trail was lost. One version of how Ventro was injured is that after he stabbed Giancippio and was running away, he was struck on the head by a stone, thrown by another Italian. The police have been handicapped by the numerous and conflicting statements of those who know anything about the murder.

One clue which the police believed might lead to the capture of Ventro, but which failed to produce anything tangible, was the discovery that a foreigner had appeared at a Bellefonte bank on Monday morning and had drawn out $125. The police suspected that the money was secured to be later turned over to Ventro to enable him to get back to Italy. Sheriff Hurley worked on this clue for some time, but was unable to find any trace of the murderer.

Sheriff Hurley and Robert Kline, foreman at the Armour gap kilns, where Ventro was employed, searched numerous freight trains at Tyrone on Monday, but Ventro did not make his appearance. While returning from Tyrone they saw a man, answering the description of Ventro, apparently hiding behind some brush near Snow Shoe intersection. On arriving at Bellefonte they secured an automobile and hurried to Snow Shoe Intersection, but were unable to find any trace of Ventro or anything further to verify their suspicion that he had been in that vicinity.

That a general fight preceded the murder is the belief of the police. It is known that Ventro, Giancippio and several others had been drinking on Sunday afternoon. One of the group supposed to have been present when the stabbing took place has a blackened eye, indicating that he participated in a fight. The fact that Ventro lost his cap, which was later found by the police, is regarded as evidence that there was a struggle of some kind before the murder. The further fact that the cap showed traces of blood is regarded as evidence that Ventro was wounded about the head.

The fact that Ventro, before stabbing Giancippio, took the latter's revolver and fired off five shells was interpreted by some as possibly suggesting a "Black Hand" murder. This, however, is not taken seriously by the police. That Ventro did not kill Giancippio with the revolver but turned on him with a stiletto or razor is regarded by the police as the most natural course for him to pursue because of his knowledge of the use of such an instrument. A razor handle was found on Monday nearby where the murder was committed, but the police still believe that the stabbing was done with a stiletto. They point out that the instrument used was plunged into Giancippio's body with such force, and then given such a violent twist, to sever the jugular vein, that it would have broken had it been a razor. Ventro's familiarity with the use of a stilletto and his knowledge of where to strike with it in order to make sure that it would kill, is interpreted by the police as indicating that he used such an instrument and that he carried it with him after the crime. Assuming that Ventro is armed and that he will put up a desperate battle should he be located, the police are prepared for any emergency.

Giancippio was buried in Bellefonte on Tuesday morning. The funeral was attended by a large number of foreigners.

It is said that Ventro stabbed another Italian at the Armour gap kilns on Easter Sunday and that he escaped prosecution by paying the man for the time he was away from his work and also paying the doctor's bill.

Sheriff Hurley yesterday secured possession of Ventro's naturalization papers. These show that he was born in Castello San Lorenzo, Italy, November 14, 1873, making his age at this time upward of 38 years. The papers were taken out at Williamsport on March 15, 1909. Ventro came to this country from Naples. He is described as being 5 feet, 9½ inches in height, weighs 150 pounds, has black hair and brown eyes, and has a scar under his right jaw.

Illness of Dist. Atty. Runkle Necessitates Postponement.

Formal announcement was made yesterday that owing to the illness of District Attorney Runkle no term of Court will be held next week, and all cases scheduled for the week have been postponed. This, of course, makes it unnecessary for the Grand Jury and the Traverse Jury to appear.

The second week of Court will be held, as scheduled.

District Attorney Runkle has been ill for the last two weeks. He is improving rapidly, but his condition is such that he will be unable to return to his office for a week or more.

Makes Splendid Report.

The Lock Haven State Normal School recently issued a report showing the work done and progress achieved by that well known institution from 1905 to 1910. The report includes a complete statement of the finances for the period in question, also of donations by citizens. Each year witnesses the Lock Haven Normal winning new laurels and its place among the leading educational institutions of Pennsylvania is assured. Centre County is well represented in the student body of the school.

Fever Closes Public School.

Owing to a recently developed case of scarlet fever in the South ward of Bellefonte, the several public schools in the old High School building, in Bishop Street, have been closed until Monday of next week. The action of the school directors in closing the building for several days was prompted by a desire to guard against any invasion of the disease and thus be on the safe side in caring for the health of the school children.

Married at Howard.

Frederick W. Bechdel and Miss Mabel Confer were married on Thursday evening, last, at the United Evangelical parsonage at Howard, the ceremony being performed by Rev. M. J. READY TO DEDICATE COURT HOUSE, MAY 19

Committees Are Working on Plans for Interesting Event.

BIG CROWD EXPECTED

Program Will Include Addresses by General Beaver, Judge Orvis and Distinguished Visitors From Other Sections of the State.

Plans are rapidly nearing completion for the big celebration in Bellefonte, on Friday, May 19, on the occasion of the dedication of the remodeled Court House. Meetings of the several committees having the plans in hand were held yesterday and the program, so far completed, announced.

The dedicatory exercises will be held in the Court House, at 10.30 o'clock, on the morning of Friday, the 19th. The program of exercises, as made up to this time, follows:

Opening Prayer, Rev. John Hewitt, rector of St. John's Protestant Episcopal church, of Bellefonte.

Address presenting the remodeled Court House to the citizens of Centre County, by Judge Ellis L. Orvis.

Address, accepting the Court House on behalf of the people, by Dr. E. E Sparks, president of State College.

Addresses by General James A. Beaver, Supreme Court Justice J. Hay Brown, of Lancaster; Superior Court Judge George B. Orlady, of Huntingdon, and other distinguished jurists, with Judge Harry Alvin Hall, of Elk County, representing the lower courts.

Benediction by Rev. Dr. A. M Schmidt, pastor of the Reformed church, of Bellefonte.

In the afternoon, at the close of the dedicatory exercises, there will be a great baseball game at Hughes field, the opposing teams being the Bellefonte Academy and the University of Pittsburg. The visiting team is regarded as one of the strongest in the western end of the State. Some idea of the speed of the Academy club may be had from the fact that recently it easily trounced the Bloomsburg State Normal School club, which on the following day defeated the strong Susquehanna league nine.

Fair weather is all that is needed to insure the success of the proposed dedication. Judged by the interest already manifested in the event a large crowd of citizens from all parts of the county is expected to be in attendance. The hour of 10.30 for the opening of the exercises has been planned to make it possible for persons arriving on morning trains to be present during the entire program. It is planned to have the Coleville, Coburn and possibly the Scotia and Port Matilda bands in attendance.

Judge Orvis has charge of the plans for inviting distinguished judges from over the State. He has promised County Commissioners Woodring, Zimmerman and Dunlap that he will provide for the occasion several of the most eloquent speakers in the State and relying on this the several committees in charge of the detailed plans predict one of the biggest days for the people in the history of Centre County.

The dedicatory exercises will not only be held in the Court House but the entire building will be thrown open to the public during the day in order that every citizen of the county who visits Bellefonte may have ample opportunity to personally inspect the work done and see for himself the advantage of the improvements. A cordial invitation to the public to be present at the exercises and also to inspect the Court House is extended by the County Commissioners.

HOSPITAL GETS $15,000 HAD APPLIED FOR $26,500

Bellefonte Institution Suffers in Pruning of Appropriations.

NEW WING IMPOSSIBLE

Money Desired for New Buildings is Refused—Amount Allowed is Increase of $3,000 Over Appropriation by State Two Years Ago.

The Bellefonte hospital will receive $15,000 from the State, an appropriation for this amount to cover the next two year; having been reported on Tuesday by the Appropriations Committee to the Legislature. The amount granted is a cut of $11,500 from what was asked for. While the reduction in the appropriation applied for will not affect the hospital in the matter of maintenance, it does mean a very serious handicap in that plans for building a new wing must be abandoned.

The hospital asked for $12,000 for maintenance, $12,000 for building, and $2,500 for a new laundry and boiler house, a total of $26,500. Of the $15,000 granted $10,000 will be devoted to maintenance and $5,000 to the completion of the present hospital building. The proposed new wing and laundry and boiler house, not being provided for in the appropriation recommended, must necessarily go over for at least two years longer unless private contributions for the required amount are received. Two years ago the hospital received from the State $12,000, so that the amount allowed this year is a net increase of $3,000.

The Lock Haven hospital was allowed $30,000. The Clearfield hospital will receive $15,000.

EPISCOPALIANS MEET

Seventh Annual Convention of Harrisburg Diocese Held Here.

Fifty-six clergymen and eighty laymen were in attendance at the seventh annual diocesan convention of the Harrisburg diocese, Protestant Episcopal church which was held in Bellefonte on Tuesday and Wednesday. On Wednesday afternoon the visitors made a trip to State College, in a special train over the Bellefonte Central Railroad, where ground was broken for the chapel for the State College mission. Returning from State College the visitors were tendered a banquet at the Brockerhoff House, the committee in charge of which was Joseph L. Montgomery, W. F. Reynolds and E. H. Richards.

Bishop James W. Darlington presided over the sessions of the diocese, which were held in St. John's Protestant Episcopal church. An interesting and somewhat novel feature was the presence of Rev. Dr. A. M. Schmidt, pastor of the Bellefonte Reformed church, who was welcomed to the convention by Bishop Darlington. General Charles M. Clement, of Sunbury, was chosen Secretary; W. K. Alricks, of Harrisburg, treasurer, and C. LaRue Munson, of Williamsport, chancellor.

The Board of Missions presented an interesting report on work done in the diocese in the last year. A new canon on missionary work was adopted, bringing the church into line with the new plan approved by the general convention. A committee of six were appointed to co-operate with the church temperance society.

One of the most important and interesting features of the convention was the appointment of a committee of six to investigate industrial, social and religious conditions as they exist in the diocese and to report on the same at the next convention, which will be held at York. The committee consists of Rev. C. G. Twombly, of Lancaster; Rev. Lewis Nichols, of Lock Haven; F. C. Hinkle, Horace B. Packer, A. B. Farquahr and Dr. G. G. Pond. The report of this committee promises to be one of the most conspicuous features of next year's convention.

The following standing committee was appointed: Rev. R. A. Sawyer, of Harrisburg; Rev. L. F. Baker, Selinsgrove; Rev. George I. Brown, Lancaster; Rev. J. W. Diggles, of Bloomsburg; Rev. Robert Bell, of Williamsport, and the following laymen: I. S. Huber, of Shamokin; H. B. Meredith, of Danville; E. D. Nelson, of Altoona; F. N. Page, of Williamsport, and David McMullen, of Lancaster.

Received 4 Kentucky Horses.

William P. Humes, of Bellefonte, on Saturday last received four fine Kentucky horses. All are thoroughbreds and were looked over with no little interest by local horsemen.

DOCTORS IN SESSION

Eighteenth Annual Meeting of West Branch Medical Ass'n Held Here.

The eighteenth annual meeting of the West Branch Medical Association, representing seven counties, was held in Bellefonte on Tuesday, the program including an interesting business session in the Court House in the afternoon and a banquet at the Brockerhoff House in the evening.

At the business session Dr. W. Wayne Babcock, surgeon at the Samaritan Hospital, in Philadelphia, delivered an address on "Modern Surgical Conception of the So-Called Chronic Dyspepsias." Dr. Jackson Deland, also of Philadelphia, regarded as the foremost American student of Dr. Ehrlick, and who recently returned from an extended trip abroad, addressed the meeting on the Ehrlick treatment of certain diseases. Following this there was a discussion on cancer, participated in by Dr. Babcock, Dr. Deland and Dr. Locke, of Bellefonte, also an address by the retiring president, Dr. J. L. Seibert, of this place.

Jersey Shore was selected as the place for holding the next annual meeting. Dr. L. M. Goodman, of Jersey Shore, was elected president of the association. Dr. Joseph M. Corson, of Chatham's Run, was re-elected secretary, a position which he has held for the last ten years.

An Expert Telegrapher.

Recalling busy days and nights at Harrisburg, when the writer served there as a legislative correspondent for the Philadelphia "Press," was a pleasant little visit to "The Republican" office a few days ago by F. M. Von Nieda, district commercial manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company. Mr. Von Nieda makes his headquarters at Harrisburg but during the greater part of the time travels through a number of counties in this section of the State, keeping in touch with his company's offices. He is an expert telegrapher and for many years handled a key in the Harrisburg office for the Western Union. In telegraphing newspaper copy Mr. Von Nieda had the reputation of being one of the fastest and most accurate telegraphers in the country. While here he mentioned the fact that John H. Wilson, formerly of Bellefonte but now manager of the Western Union office at Altoona, is regarded as one of the most progressive and trustworthy men in the service of the Western Union. This will be gratifying news to John's numerous friends here.

Home From Florida.

T. B. Budinger, of Snow Shoe, yesterday returned home from Florida, where he had been spending the last three months. His appearance would seem to indicate that his stay in the "Sunny South" greatly benefitted his health. When he went South Mr. Budinger was suffering from a severe attack of grip and his friends were afraid that he was on the verge of a general breaking down in health. He says that on the second day after his arrival in Gainesville, Florida, he was no longer bothered with grip and that he gradually recovered his strength. Mr. Budinger has extensive business interests in Gainesville. These include a one-half interest in the Bock Lumber Company, of that place. A daughter, Miss Blanche Budinger, accompanied him on the trip. The return journey was made by boat.

Colt With Six Legs.

The favorite brood mare of Jacob Reish, at Pine Grove Mills, this week gave birth to a freak colt. The colt had six legs, four in front and two rear legs. Until it died a short time later the colt was quite a curiosity to the residents of that section of the county.

Mrs. Louis Rauchle Dead.

Mrs. Louis Rauchle died on Monday, last, at her late home, at North Philipsburg, aged 50 years, 5 months and 20 days. Deceased was born in Germany. A husband and nine children survive. Deceased was a member of the Lutheran church.

CANDIDATES NEED NOT FILE NEW PETITIONS

Change in Date of Primaries Does Not Affect Procedure.

NAMES GO ON BALLOT

County Commissioners Explain that Petitions Were Drafted to Meet Such Emergency—Candidates Are Saved Much Annoyance.

As a result of the change in the date for holding the uniform primaries, from June 3 to September 30, considerable doubt exists in the minds of the several candidates in Centre County as to whether or not they must amend the petitions already filed or present entirely new petitions. In a number of counties, it develops, candidates have been notified that they must amend their petitions so that the same may bear the date for the primaries, September 30. Because of this fact "The Republican" has received numerous inquiries as to how candidates in Centre County are affected.

Inquiry this week at the office of the County Commissioners in regard to the point in question brought to light the information that the petitions already filed by the several candidates need not be amended and that the same, in their present form, will hold good in order that the candidates' names may appear on the official primary ballots of their respective parties. The petitions filed, which were intended for the primaries on June 3, it was explained, do not contain any printed or written statement setting forth that they are for primaries for that particular date. The petitions set forth that they are for "primaries of the year 1911." Because of this, it was stated, the petitions hold good for September and need not be changed or amended in any way.

Minstrels Net $225.

The net profits of the two performances of the Bellefonte Academy Minstrels, advertisements, etc., on Friday and Saturday nights of last week, will be about $225, according to those having charge of the financial end of the project. The gross proceeds amounted to $448.45, and while all bills are not in hand it is believed that the expense will not exceed more than one-half this amount.

It has been a long time since Bellefonte has witnessed a better home talent production than that presented by the Academy minstrels and the one-act comedy, the cast of which was made up of strictly Bellefonte talent. The singing and music was much above the average, the jokes were anything but ancient, and the comedy, "Mrs. Flynn's Lodgers," gave some persons in town their first smile in many months. The street parade on the afternoon of each day was away ahead of expectations. All who contributed toward the success of the minstrels are deserving of thanks.

The net proceeds of the two performances will be devoted toward the Bellefonte Baseball Association, making it possible to wipe out the debt from last season and still have a "little in bank" should an effort be made to organize a club in town this year. It is entirely probable that efforts will be made to put a team in the field, although it is pretty well understood that if done at all it will be on a more economical basis than has been the case in other years.

Proclamation.

Of late considerable interest has been shown in the cities and boroughs of the Commonwealth in the beautifying and improvement of the municipalities. In our own town such improvement has been materially assisted by the efforts of the Civic Club in imbuing the citizens with the true Civic pride.

In accordance with the custom established last year, the members of the Club have designated the week beginning May 15, 1911, as clean up week.

As the object is a meritorious one and of a general benefit to the community I would request and urge all good citizens of the borough to remove all accumulation of rubbish from off and about their premises on or before the week beginning May 15, 1911.

Every lawful means at the command of the Borough authorities will be exercised to enforce the fullest compliance with the requirements ot this request, to the end that absolute cleanliness may be accomplished and maintained.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and attached the seal of the borough of Bellefonte this 6th day of May, A. D. 1911.

A Story Told by a Vet to His Grandchildren on Memorial Day

By F. A. Mitchel

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"Now, grandpa, this is Memorial day, and you promised when it came round you'd tell us a story about the war in which you took part. Come; we're all ready."

"Very well, my dear; I suppose I'll have to keep my promise."

A girl of seven perched herself on the broad arm of a piazza chair; Tommy climbed up on one knee, Billy on the other, and all waited eagerly for the story, which I began as follows:

"When I was a soldier boy in the Federal army—I was nineteen years old at the time I'm going to tell you about—we were fighting in Virginia. One day the general—we'll call him General Bumble."

"General Bumblebee?" asked Billy.

"Yes, General Bumblebee, if you like. He was a real general, but what I'm going to tell you happened so long ago that I've forgotten some of the names. So I'll make 'em up as I go along. Well, General Bumblebee sent for a friend of mine, a very particular friend, and he looked like me too."

"What was his name?" asked Tommy.

"His name? Why, his name was—Johnny Spy."

"That's a funny name. Call 'em all by those made up names."

"Johnny Spy went to General Bumblebee's headquarters, and the general said to him:

"'Corporal'—Johnny was a corporal—'your captain recommends you as a good man to go down into the enemy's lines to secure information.' Now, the southern general—what shall we call him?"

"You give him his name, grandpa."

"We'll call him General Gobble."

"Turkey Gobble?"

"Yes; Turkey Gobble if you like. General Bee told Johnny Spy to go down dressed up like somebody else so that the Confederates wouldn't know him, look about, find out what they were going to do and come back and tell the general.

"The next day a farmer's boy with a faded straw hat on his head and rough clothes and driving a cow got mixed up with the Confederate pickets."

"I know who that was," said the girl, Alice. "That was Johnny Spy."

"You're right. Johnny told them that his home was back of their lines, and they let him go through. But after he got in the rear of the picket line somehow Johnny and his cow got separated and were not seen together any more.

"There were a great many peddlers following the armies on both sides who carried baskets full of cheap watches and jewelry that they sold to the soldiers at high prices. The morning after Johnny came into the Confederate camp one of these peddlers was going about selling watches and scarfpins."

"Was he Johnny?" asked Tom.

"Yes; he was Johnny."

"Where did he get his watches and things?"

"From another peddler. You see, the general had given him plenty of money, and he bought a whole basketful. Johnny persuaded a family to let him stay with them awhile and soon found out that they were Union people. For awhile he pretended to be very bitter against the north, but there was a young girl in the family that Johnny took a shine to, and after awhile he told her that he was a Union soldier in disguise. You see, he wanted her to help him get information."

"What was her name?"

"Her name? Why, I reckon we'll call her Eudoxia."

"That's the funniest name for a girl I ever heard!" exclaimed Alice.

"It's the name of a Roman empress who lived at Constantinople."

"Does she live there now?"

"Not very likely, since she reigned some 1,500 years ago. The house this Union family lived in was right in among the Confederate camps, and Johnny Spy and Eudoxia found out a good many things for Johnny to tell General Bumblebee when he got back. It was an awful risky thing to do, for if they caught Johnny they would hang him up by the neck till he was as dead as the Empress Eudoxia."

"What's Eudoxia's short name?" asked Alice. "Eudie?"

"Yes, indeed, Eudie. I'll call her that after this. Eudie was very much worried for fear the Confederates would find out that Johnny was a Union soldier, and, sure enough, one day Johnny found himself in trouble. You see, he had been within the Confederate lines before, and one of the soldiers recognized him—that is, the soldier thought he did, but when he had seen him Johnny was dressed as a curate. So the man wasn't certain.

"Eudie heard about it and told Johnny. He made up his mind to get out of that region as quickly as possible, and Eudie agreed to go part way with him, for they hoped that the two might pass for brother and sister when they got where they were not known. Johnny wanted to go to his room for some papers, but didn't dare. In a wood they changed their outer garments. Eudie cut off her long hair that reached nearly to her ankles and fixed it up as a wig for Johnny. They had just finished—Eudie in Johnny's trousers and Johnny in her dress, with her hair coiled up on the top of his head—when they met some Confederate cavalrymen coming from the opposite direction. The general of another part of the Confederate army had received a telegram from General Gobble to head off a young farmer's boy and girl and hold on to the boy. The troopers took Eudie, whom they supposed to be the boy, and let Johnny go where he liked.

"Eudie was confronted by the man who had recognized Johnny. Of course he said she wasn't the one he meant, but, having on Johnny's clothes, looked suspicious. Besides, as soon as they suspected Johnny was a spy they searched the room in which he had slept and found the papers he had left there. They contained information about the Confederate army.

"So Eudie was brought before a lot of officers and tried. They didn't get together to find out whether she was a spy or not, but to hang her, according to army law, which, I fancy, is pretty poor law, but very effective with guilty persons. They fixed it so that they could hang her according to orders, and, since they didn't like to waste any time in carrying them out, she was to be hanged at 10 o'clock the next day."

"Oh, my, grandpa!" exclaimed Alice. "Wasn't that awful?"

"It seems so, but it really wasn't. Eudie could get off by telling them she wasn't a boy at all, but she wouldn't do it till the last moment, because she wanted to give Johnny all the time she possibly could to get away. But she put off letting them know she was a girl till she brought upon herself all the danger of being a spy. She let them put the rope around her neck before she said a word about it. Then they wouldn't believe her.

"'Don't hang me,' she said. 'I'm no spy. I'm not even a boy. I'm a girl.'

"The hanging was under the direction of the provost marshal, who said: 'I know what you're after. You want to gain a little time till we can investigate?'

"'That won't do, major,' interposed the officer of the day, who was present. 'I've been suspicious of this case all along. I think we'd better send her down to the hospital tent, where there are a couple of women nurses, and find out about the matter.'

"The provost marshal gave in, and they sent Eudie under guard to the hospital tent. When they learned that she was really a girl they asked her what she meant by masquerading as a boy, but she wouldn't tell them, fearing that Johnny hadn't got beyond the Confederate lines and she might compromise him. So they let Eudie go home.

"Johnny ran away in the wood and was awfully afraid that when the Confederates found out they had captured the wrong person and let the right one go they would hunt all over for him. He walked toward the Federal lines for awhile, then, hearing the sound of horses' hoofs, he crawled into a hollow log. A company of southern cavalry were going through the wood, and some of them jumped their horses over the very log that Johnny was hidden in. He was sure they were looking for him, but at that time it was not known that Eudie was not Johnny, and his fears caused him to be mistaken. However, they were just as dangerous to him as if they had been looking for him, because if they had found a girl loitering in the wood they might have suspected something.

"Johnny didn't dare crawl out of the log till it was dark. Then he looked up at the north star and walked toward it till he saw lights and knew that they marked the Federal camps. He must have gone through the Confederate pickets without knowing it, for suddenly he heard a click and a voice, 'Who comes there?' He answered: 'Friend. Don't shoot. Take me to General Bee.'

"The picket called a corporal, and Johnny was taken to the general's tent. The general was asleep, but Johnny's information was so important that an aid-de-camp waked him up, and Johnny told him what he had learned. And that's the end of the story."

"What became of Johnny, grandpa?" asked little Billy.

"And what became of Eudie?" asked Alice.

"After the war Johnny went down into Virginia and found Eudie, and they were married."

"Where did they go to live?"

"They came up here to Johnny's home."

"Are they alive now?"

"Yes."

"Are they any children's grandpa and grandma?"

"Yes."

"Whose?"

"Yours."

"Oh, my goodness!" cried Alice. "You don't mean that grandma is Eudie?"

"She is."

"And you are Johnny Spy?" asked Tommy with eyes wide open.

"I am."

"Well, I declare!" exclaimed all.

"Did all that really happen, grandpa," asked Tommy, "or did you make it up?"

"It really happened. The civil war was so full of such adventures that if they were all written out a million books wouldn't contain them all. Many of our officers and men could tell such stories or could have told them," I added, "for our ranks are as thin as after the Wilderness and soon will cease to be entirely."

UNIONVILLE MILL

Interesting Description Published in "Miller's Review," of Phila.

The "Miller's Review," published in Philadelphia, several day ago contained an interesting article describing the Unionville flour mill, owned by D Buck, of that place. The article, which was illustrated with a photograph of the mill, was as follows:

"A mill that has no competitor nearer than eight or ten miles, and is at the same time located in a prosperous community is generally considered as in a good position for doing business. Formerly the mills in the East were in many cases within half the distance here indicated from each other, the consequence being that two mills thus situated went over each other's ground rather effectively. There is plenty of competition yet among neighboring mills, but when it is considered that the number of Eastern mills has within the last few years been reduced about one-third, it can be seen that there is now no such thing as a congestion of Eastern flour mills.

"Located eight and twelve miles respectively from the two nearest mills, The Unionville Mills, at Fleming, Pa., enjoy a good lively trade during the whole of the year. This mill is one of the old landmarks of the locality and is within a few hundred feet of the railroad station.

"The Unionville Mills are owned and operated by D. Buck. The building is a three-story frame structure with basement and attic. In the basement are the line shafting, elevator boots, etc; on the first floor are a flour packer, chop conveyor and bagger's scales, and, on the second floor are three double stands of 6x16 Monarch rolls installed two years ago by Sprout, Waldron & Co., Muncy, Pa., one pair of four-foot buhrs for grinding chop and one pair for buckwheat, one buckwheat scourer and gravel separator and one Monitor scourer for wheat, and hopper scales for wheat.

"On the third floor are a Monarch sieve bolter and a finishing reel, a Great Western corn sheller, Monitor receiving separator and grain bins.

"In the attic are found the various elevator heads, grain bins and one buckwheat reel."

New Fashions in Stationery.

While the conservative woman still prefers her heavy white writing paper with moderate sized envelopes, the younger members of society are this year rioting in colorful stationery for their correspondence.

Plaid papers in ecru, pink and gray blue are a popular novelty just now, vying with the new bordered stationery of white with fine lines in various colors about the edge.

Rough weave paper with a sort of plaid effect is one shade being shown at exclusive shops this year, while in shape the new letter paper is very broad and short, with long, narrow envelopes, much the same shape being carried out in the new note paper, which, by the way, is paper and envelope in one, requiring only to be folded and sealed with the flap that protrudes from the end of the paper to be ready for mailing.

Square cards of rough weave with envelopes are also sold now and are very fashionable for replying to invitations or notes, since there is sufficient room for all one needs to say on the card, which is easily slipped into the envelope and mailed.

The monogram papers are now shown with the initials up in the lefthand corner instead of the middle of the paper, and especially smart are the new London smoke papers with the address in very black type at the head of the letter.

The wise woman will not use sachets of any sort in her desk, and will also be careful to paste the stamps on straight and to use black ink, for all these things are marks of good taste.

Liquid Cures Eczema Where Salves Fail.

In regard to skin diseases, medical authorities are now agreed on this:

Don't imprison the disease germs in your skin by the use of greasy salves, and thus encourage them to multiply. A true cure of all eczematous diseases can be brought about only by using the healing agents in the form of a liquid.

WASH THE GERMES OUT.

A simple wash: A compound of Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol, and other ingredients as combined in the D. D. D. Prescription. This penetrates to the disease germs and destroys them, then soothes and heals the skin as nothing else has ever done.

A 25 cents trial bottle will start the cure and give you instant relief.

Flower Show at State College.

The Department of Horticulture and the Penn State Crab Apple Club, the horticultural student organization of the Pennsylvania State College, managed a flower show during the last week of April that was decidedly successful. Florists throughout the state were requested to contribute and those who responded did so most liberally. Floriculture is rapidly coming into prominence in the college and the show did much to arouse interest on the part of the students and the general public. The department is at present hampered somewhat by want of space under glass, but with the proposed addition of several more houses this branch of horticulture will receive rapid development. Professor Gregg has charge of the work in floriculture and the success of the show was very largely due to his untiring efforts.

The exhibition was staged in the well lighted service room of the new greenhouses and its capacity was taxed. It will probably be necessary in the future to use the college armory. The center of the room had a long table upon which were the roses, the center of interest to most visitors. The sides were given over to the carnations and potted specimens. The blooms imparted a fragrance that made one loath to leave.

Not all of the florists who received announcements of the show responded but there were enough generous contributions to make the exhibit a success. Myers and Samyman, of Chestnut Hill, Pa., sent a magnificent display of American Beauty, My Maryland and Hilda roses. The Pittsburg Cut Flower Company made the largest display. Included in the display were splendid specimens of Richmond, My Maryland, Pink and White Killarney roses, also Lawson, White and Pink Enchantress, Windsor and Victoria carnations. S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., of Philadelphia, contributed American Beauty roses, snapdragons, and Victoria and Enchantress carnations. Other contributors were Floral Exchange, Edgely, Pa.; Golden Gate, Brides, and Bridesmaids roses; Oakwood Rose Gardens, Oil City, Pa., Richmond, Brides, and Bridesmaids roses; Wm. Allen, Housewood Cemetery, Homewood, Pa., Primrose and Spiraea; Finleyville Floral Co., Finleyville, Pa., Enchantress, Beacon, Winona and White Perfection carnations; W. M. Deyoe, Oil City, Pa., several varieties of carnations; Stafford Flower Farm, Stafford, Pa., White Perfection and Windsor carnations; Saxonward Greenhouses, Castle Shannon, Pa., Enchantress carnations, snapdragons, and Killarney roses. The New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station, New Brunswick, N. J., exhibited several specimens of roses and carnations grown with commercial fertilizers, only.

The Hilda roses showed the most substance and keeping quality. They were followed closely by a vase of the White Killarney. The Enchantress and Beacon carnations commanded the most praise.

PERSONAL SKETCH OF SENATOR BOIES PENROSE NEW REPUBLICAN LEADER IN U. S. SENATE

The Baltimore "American" in a special depatch from its Washington correspondent, published the following interesting personal sketch of Senator Penrose, who, as Chairman of the Finance Committee, is the Republican leader of the United States Senate:

"Penrose has more sense than Aldrich." This observation from an insurgent Republican senator was intended neither as a tribute nor a historical fact but as an explanation. He had hated Aldrich and he did not love Penrose. The caucus of Republican senators had just adjourned. A steering committee charged with the duty of reorganizing the majority membership of the Senate committees had been selected. The insurgent senators, long barred from a Republican caucus by the ruthless and uncompromising leadership of Senator Aldrich, had come into their own. They had been recognized as Republican senators with membership in the steering committee, which made certain the square deal for them in the reorganization of the Senate.

"How did that happen?" a newspaper correspondent asked the insurgent senator.

And the explanation from the insurgent's viewpoint was clearly stated. Penrose had more sense than Aldrich.

When the Sixty-second Congress came to an end at noon on March 4 last the leadership of the Senate nominally passed from Nelson W. Aldrich, of Rhode Island, to Boies Penrose, of Pennsylvania. As a matter of fact, Senator Aldrich had surrendered his commission weeks before the session closed, and it was Senator Penrose who directed the uncertain Republican organization in a tumultous party conflict which commanded the attention of the people. With the coming of the new congress he planned the reorganization of the Senate. Friends of Senator Penrose in the Senate say that with the hostile attitude of Senator Aldrich toward the insurgents he never had been in sympathy. At any rate, he not only counseled, but insisted upon, party harmony. Concession and conciliation followed. When the caucus assembled the insurgents were there; when it adjourned they went away satisfied.

No other man Pennsylvania has sent to the United States Senate has attained the position of prominence in that body now held by Boies Penrose. The story of Senator Penrose's start in life presents nothing to suggest the simple annals of the poor. He is a member of a wealthy and aristocratic Philadelphia family. On both sides he comes from pure colonial stock. His father, the late R. A. F. Penrose, was widely known as a scholar, physician and professor in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania. His grandfather, Hon. Charles B. Penrose, was solicitor of the Treasury under Presidents William Henry Harrison and John Tyler, speaker of the Pennsylvania Senate for several terms and a lawyer who stood at the head of the Pennsylvania bar. His great grandfather was Clement Biddle Penrose, appointed by President Thomas Jefferson one of three commissioners to take charge of the recently acquired territory of Louisiana. He is a direct decendant of William Biddle, a friend and contemporary of William Penn, who came to America about the same time as Penn and who was one of the proprietors of the province of New Jersey. Nichols Scull, surveyor general of Pennsylvania in the old colonial days, and Philip Thomas, secretary to Cecil Calvert, Lord Baltimore, and founder of the Thomas family, of Maryland, are among Senator Penrose's ancestors.

Senator Penrose was educated by private tutors at home until he was sixteen years old. Then he entered Harvard college and graduated with high honors. As one of the graduates selected to deliver a commencement oration his subject was, "The political leadership of Martin Van Buren." Senator Penrose has a genius for politics. He has been in politics since he was old enough to vote. When 24 years old he was elected to represent a Philadelphia district as a member of the House at Harrisburg. From that body he went to the state senate where he served ten years. In both branches of the legislature he was a recognized leader. He resigned from the state senate to enter the United States Senate on March 4, 1897, the date of William McKinley's first inauguration, and twice has been re-elected.

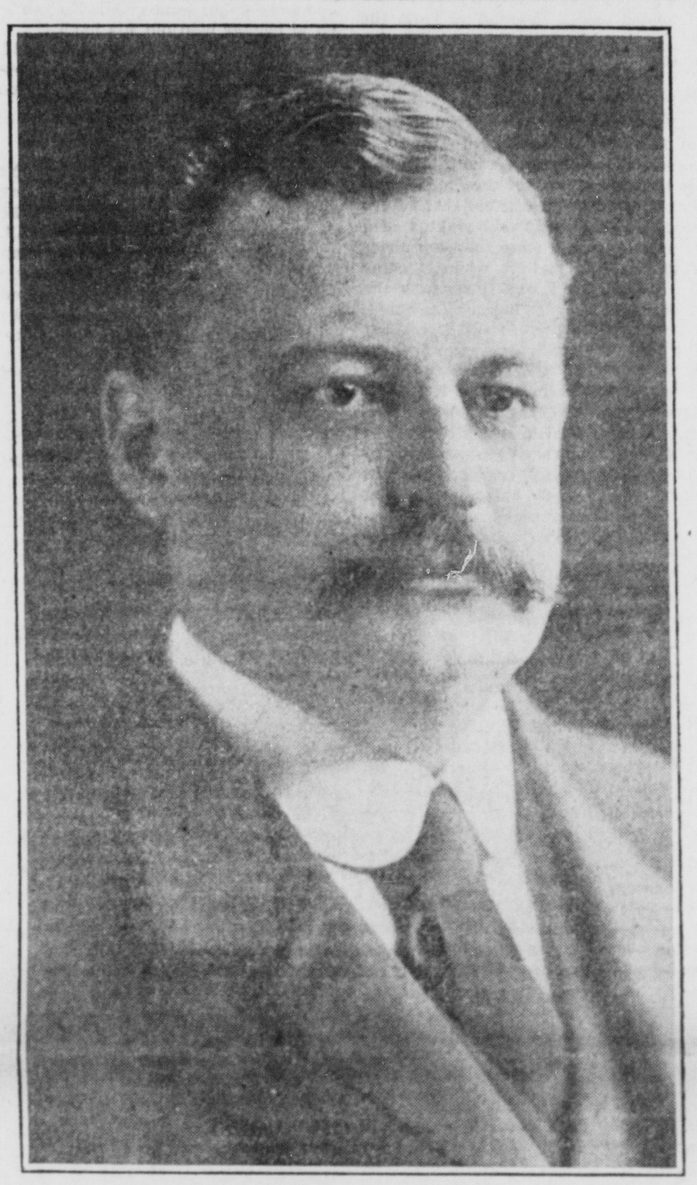
During half a century the mantle of Republican leadership in Pennsylvania has fallen upon the shoulders of only three men, Simon Cameron, Matthew Stanley Quay and Boies Penrose. The control of Cameron was an incident of the politics of the Civil War period. Years before he died he was supplanted by Quay. The leadership of Penrose dates from the death of Quay. Quay had to fight for everything he secured in politics. Each chapter in the story of his supremacy of the Republican organization records rebellion against his rule. The forces that opposed him were defeated but they never surrendered. They refused to negotiate with him for peace. They kept him out of the Senate for two years and they fought him until the day he died. In Pennsylvania when Quay died were able men who had been in politics when Penrose was a boy. They were entirely willing to assume the leadership death had forced Quay to relinquish. As a preliminary to a fight for control these men declared for a "new deal." While they were talking about it the "new deal" came—from the hand of Penrose. His leadership was the logic of the situation. He was the strong man of Pennsylvania politics.

When Quay died each of the 67 counties of Pennsylvania had two Republican organizations, Quay and anti-Quay. At the head of the city government of Philadelphia was John Weaver, whom the anti-Quay forces, in the name of reform, had elected mayor. In Pittsburg was political chaos, wrought by ripper legislation enacted at the direction of Quay as a blow at Chris Magee, whom Quay had never beaten in Allegheny county. The anti-Quay Republicans squared for the fight against Penrose. It came two years after the passing of Quay, when a state ticket was to be nominated. In the primaries the Penrose organization swept the state. With three-fourths of the delegates Penrose nominated at Harrisburg in 1906 a ticket headed by Edwin S. Stuart for governor. Stuart was a Philadelphian; he had been mayor of that city and personally was very popular. Throughout Pennsylvania, however, he was comparatively unknown. The other candidates also, admittedly, were worthy to hold the offices for which they had been presented to the people. The opponents of Penrose, refusing to accept the action of the convention, joined with the Democrats and nominated a state ticket. Their candidate for governor was Lewis Emery, Jr., of Bradford. The contest that followed equaled in bitterness the fiights of Quay. Penrose was made the issue. A vote for Stuart would be a vote for Penrose's control of Pennsylvania politics. Emery's election would sound the doom of Penrose's leadership. So shrieked the anti-Penrose orators and newspapers. Stuart was elected.

Having established himself at the head of the Republican organization Penrose started the work of rebuilding it. He brought to his support men who had fought Quay throughout his political life. Under his management the anti-Quay organization in the counties one by one disappeared. An organization Republican was elected mayor of Philadelphia. The Republicans of Pittsburg no longer held aloof from the organization that controlled the state, as they had done during the life of Quay.

Throughout Pennsylvania there was a noticeable change of sentiment regarding Penrose. The people wanted to know what he had done in politics that he ought not to have done. In the construction of the new Capitol at Harrisburg millions had been stolen. At the trials of the grafters it was disclosed that neither Penrose nor the Republican organization had received a dollar of the graft. Nor had Penrose's name been linked with a crooked deal in Pittsburg or Philadelphia or anywhere else. Under his direction honest men had been elected to office and were serving the people well.

Meanwhile the record of Penrose in the Senate was attracting the attention of Pennsylvania. From a comparatively unknown senator, who had been overshadowed by the masterful influence of Quay in that body, he had broadened and developed in influence and statesmanship. He had been conspicuous in the fight in the Senate for legislation imposing a tax on oleomargarine demanded by the farmers of the county. The speech he delivered in the advocacy of this tax was said to be the most forceful and comprehensive argument submitted to the Senate in the debate on the Oleomargarine bill. His support of that measure and other measures in the interest of the farmers brought him their support.



U. S. SENATOR BOIES PENROSE

As chairman of the Senate Committee on Immigration he had been active in the enactment of the Chinese Exclusion Law and other labor laws indorsed by union labor. He had been made chairman of the Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, a great business committee of the Senate, and a member of the Committee on Finance. Pennsylvania had not been represented on the Committee on Finance for many years. The appointment of Penrose was of importance to the state because that committee passes upon tariff legislation. Penrose was the kind of tariff revisionist Pennsylvania enthuses over—a protectionist without a flaw. Gradually the people came to realize that he was a senator of large influence, and that he was rendering the Keystone State effective service. Their opportunity to record their opinion of him came two years ago. Senator Penrose's second term in the Senate was drawing to a close and the legislature to be elected would name his successor. No state officers were to be elected and in the legislative contests was but one issue, the candidacy of Penrose. The election returns are an accurate index of Pennsylvania's opinion of him. The Pennsylvania legislature on joint ballott consists of 257 members, 207 members of the House and 50 senators. When the two branches of the legislature met to elect a United States senator Penrose received 198 of the 244 votes recorded. Pennsylvania was entirely satisfied with its senators and had emphasized the fact at the polls.

It was during the extra session of the Sixty-first Congress that Senator Penrose attained a position in the Senate where he could be of largest usefulness to the people of Pennsylvania. As passed by the House the Payne bill contained tariff reductions, which the manufacturres insisted, would have proven ruinous to the interests of labor and capitol in that state. These reductions ranged from 10 to 50 per cent, and they included nearly every manufactured article of which Pennsylvania is a large producer. Senator Penrose knew what sort of tariff revision Pennsylvania was willing to accept, and as a member of the Finance Committee he insisted upon the elimination of the sweeping reduction adopted by the House. When the bill passed the Senate it provided duties, pronounced by the Pennsylvania manufacturers, adequate for the protection of the state's industries. As a member of the conference committee he successfully defended the increased rates. For his work in connection with the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich law Senator Penrose was warmly commended by the people and the press of Pennsylvania.

Senator Penrose's diversions are horseback riding, yachting and hunting and fishing. He owns two blooded saddle horses. In seasonable weather he usually spends the week-end on his yacht, the Betty, one of the finest yachts on the South Jersey coast. He spends his summers in Montana, where, with a companion, he roughs it in the old-fashioned way, foraging for a living by hunting and fishing. He has not been inside a theater in 30 years. He is a member of nearly all of the well-known clubs of Philadelphia, but seldom is seen in any of them except the Union League, where he dines with some of his close political and personal friends. He is a bachelor. When he went to Harrisburg in 1896 to be elected to the Senate he was lectured by Don Cameron, whom he was to succeed as senator, because he was not married.

"I see by the newspapers that a member of the New Jersey legislature has introduced a bill imposing a tax on bachelors," said Cameron. "A mighty good bill, Penrose, a mighty good bill, and it should be enacted into law. A married man has better standing in the community than a bachelor, which is exactly as it should be. Now, Penrose, you are a young man with a political future. But you should get married; it will help you in politics."

"All right," replied Penrose, seriously, "I'll marry any woman the Republican organization indorses."

Senator Penrose never plays cards. Once he was induced by a party of political friends to sit in a poker game enroute to a national convention. He was so ignorant of poker that the rules had to be written out for him and the list he consulted during the progress of the game. As a beginner he had the proverbial luck and won.

Finally there was a good pot. Penrose followed along and came in as the raises increased. As the cards were drawn he asked what cards all or one color meant. He was told.

His luck had been running strong, and after several raises his opponents retired and gave the pot to Penrose. He threw down his cards and showed four hearts and a diamond.

"I thought you said you had a flush," some one remarked.

"Well, they are all of one color." And those who were playing did not know whether Penrose was bluffing or was actually ignorant of the game.

Senator Penrose is of "heroic mold." He is six feet four inches tall. He is one of the best dressed men in Congress. He is a member of the Philadelphia bar, and before coming to the Senate practiced his profession as a member of the Philadelphia law firm of Page, Allison & Penrose.

Circus King Invades North.

E. Hagg, proprietor of the Mighty Haag Shows, which exhibits in Bellefonte on Thursday, May 25, and considered the Circus King below the Mason and Dixon line, has decided to come north of the Mason and Dixon line, being the first time the big southern circus has ever been out of its own territory.

The invasion will be watched by jealous eyes by the big northern kings of circusdom, and a big novelty is in store for the northern people as they will have a chance to see the southerner as he really and truly is in all phases of his life, as the show is managed, directed, owned and all departments are peopled by southerners only.

There will be real southern beauties riding blue ribboned Kentucky bred horses; the southern colonel will be in evidence, with his wide brimmed white hat, together with the "yes sah" that has made the southerner famous.

Mr. Haag also claims to have the finest sixteen head of Kentucky mules, which are world wide renowned, and will be of great interest to horsemen of this section Taking it all in all a great treat is in store for the public wherever the Mighty Haag Shows exhibit.

Labor Conditions in U. S. Navy.

All navy-yard employees receive pay for seven national holidays; laborers and mechanics are allowed fifteen days' leave with pay after one year's service, but no sick leave; per diem classified employees (clerks, draftsmen, inspectors, messengers, etc.) are allowed fifteen days leave, and, in exceptional and meritorious cases, can be granted fifteen additional days on account of sickness; per annum classified employees at navy yards are allowed thirty days leave, and, in exceptional and meritorious cases can be granted thirty days additional on account of sickness; by executive order, four hours (exclusive of time for luncheon) constitutes a day's work on Saturdays, during the months of July, August and September, for all clerks and other employees of the Federal Government wherever employed, with the proviso that the order shall not apply to any bureau or office of the Government, or to any of the clerks or other employees thereof, that may for special public reasons be excepted therefrom by the head of the Department having supervision or control of such bureau or office, or where the same would be inconsistent with the provisions of the existing law. It will be seen therefore that all per diem employees of the navy yards are entitled to twenty-seven days leave and holiday per annum. In addition to the above, unclassified employees are paid full pay if injured in the line of duty, while engaged on Government work, and if killed, their heirs are paid one year's salary at the per diem rate the employee was receiving at the time of his death.—Engineering Magazine.

Costly Suit Ended.

A most remarkable legal suit was brought to a sudden close, in the case of the government against the Coca-Cola Company, at Chattanooga, Tenn., last week, when Federal Judge E. D. Sanford took the case from the jury, whereupon the government withdrew. The suit was originally brought by the government on the allegation that Coca Cola was impure and injurious to health and was manufactured in violation of the pure food law. Judge Sanford ruled that the government had failed to sustain its allegations and there the case was dropped.

It is estimated by persons familiar with the case that the cost of the litigation, resulting from the suit filed by the government, will not fall short of $200,000. So far as the government is concerned, it is well able to bear its share of the expense. The Coca Cola Company must bear its share, whether it is able to or not. The company was compelled to pay over a fortune to not only protect its good name but to sustain a fight for existence. In the end it is just where it stood before the government charges were brought, with the exception that it is many thousands of dollars poorer. For this it apparently has no redress. A smaller and weaker company would have been bankrupted by the litigation, even though it won the verdict in the end.

All fair minded and well meaning men will at once applaud the government's efforts to stamp out fraudulent, adulterated and impure foods. The government's efforts in this direction are a safeguard to health and a check to unscrupulous manufacturers. But it becomes a serious matter when the government plunges an honest manufacturing firm into costly litigation, assails the name of the goods manufactured and then in the end fails to sustain its case in the courts. Certainly it was never the intent of the pure food law that its enforcement should be handled in such a reckless manner. The government has in its employ competent chemists and experts. It is within the power of the government to conduct a thorough investigation whenever it is suspected that some article of food drug or drink is adulterated, misbranded or in any other way is a violation of the pure food law. All this the government is able to do, and should do, before public charges are made and the good name of a business firm held up to criticism and attack. Unless such a private investigation produces positive proof of the existence of adulteration or fraud certainly the government has no moral right to force the charges into a public hearing and there injure the good name and credit of a business firm.

While the Coca Cola Company has been put to great expense and has been done a great injustice, the result of the litigation now at an end is likely to have the wholesome effect of prompting some government officials to appreciate that they, just as much so as other individuals, are likely to err. It should also have the effect of prompting these officials to have the same respect for the rights of business firms as they themselves would demand were their individual interests assailed.

Ancient Rome's Libraries.

The libraries of ancient Rome were immense and splendid. Lucullus, whose name is associated with table luxuries, expended much of his wealth on books. His library, says Plutarch, had "walks, galleries and cabinets open to all visitors." Julius Caesar proposed to open this library definitely to the public.

How were these vast libraries, in addition to the book shops, filled? With his trained staff of readers and transcribers, a publisher could turn out an edition of any work at very cheap rates, and almost at a moment's notice. There was no initial expense of typesetting before a single copy could be produced, no ruinous extras in the shape of printers' corrections. The manuscript came from the author; the publisher handed it over to his slaves, and if a book of modest dimensions, the complete edition could be ready, if necessary, within twenty-four hours. Actually, then, books were produced and sold more easily and quickly in ancient Rome than they are in modern London.—T. P.'s London Weekly.

The "Iliad" Not a Myth.

The fall of Troy after a ten year siege by the Grecian princes about 1184 B. C. has long been considered as a rather mythical foundation for Homer's immortal epic, the "Iliad." But in 1876 the excavations of Schliemann on the reputed site of Troy brought to light under the ashes of two superincumbent fortress cities the remains answering to the descriptions of Homer and a hidden vault containing goblets, bowls, vases, gems, jewels, armes de luxe and like articles in gold, silver and bronze. These treasures are now generally acknowledged to be the veritable remnants of the once vast riches of Priam, which, although depleted by ten years of costly warfare in the purchase of supplies and mercenaries and the final sack of the ruined city, were thus preserved to enrich the museums of Europe and greatly increase our realization of the wealth and art of that ancient Ilium, which we have hitherto been disposed to consider a poet's dream.—Charles Winslow Hall in National Magazine.

Dickens' Literary Gains.

The papers have often printed a great deal of pure nonsense on the subject of Dickens' literary gains. Dickens is stated to have died leaving "earnings that often accrue to a respectable solicitor." This is rubbish. Dickens left £93,000 in round figures, and this did not include a considerable sum of money that he had settled some years before his death. His readings (1858-69) had brought in about £36,000. It is forgotten that Dickens began life without one penny and that every farthing he spent or gave away or left was earned by himself, only excepting £2,000 which was bequeathed to him by a friend about two years before his own death. Dickens lived liberally (some people said extravagantly) for about thirty-four years, he brought up and started in life a large and very expensive family, and he gave away a great deal of money to needy relatives. — London Truth.

Antiquity of the Senate.

The senate is historically much older than the lower house, or house of representatives, as it is called in our country and time. In the remote time, while as yet there was no such thing as a science of government, the tribe was wont to look to its old men, on account of their wisdom and experience, for advice in all matters pertaining to the tribe, and those old men were the first senators. The word senator comes from "senis," meaning old. As civilization advanced and seated government became a fact the senate continued to be composed of the old men, and when by and by the second chamber, or council, was added the senate continued to receive the larger measure of reverence and respect.—New York American.

Crow Quills Make the Best Pens.

A quill penmaker says that no pen will do as fine writing as the crow quill. It requires the assistance of a microscope to make a proper pen out of such a quill, but when made it is of wonderful delicacy. The microscopic writing told of in books of literary curiosities was all done with a crow quill. The steel pens of the present have very fine points, but somehow a finer point can be given to a quill than has ever been put on a steel pen, and for delicacy nothing can equal it.

Mutual Forbearance.

"You and your wife seem to get along nicely."

"Fairly well. We had an understanding from the start. I wasn't to expect a dollar to buy more than a dollar's worth of goods, and she wasn't to tell me about the fine men she might have married."—Washington Herald.

No Spooning.

"Tell me that I may hope," he pleaded.

"All right," she replied, "hope on, but don't ask me to feed your hope with a spoon."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Considerate Revolutionists.

The wildest and most ferocious revolutionaries I have known have often been in private life merciful, tender, unselfish, considerate.—T. P. O'Connor in London T. P.'s Weekly.

Warned.

He—Darling, I don't know what to say to your father. She—Just say, "Mr. Munn, I wish to marry your daughter," then dodge.

The American Born Princess.

My father, Prince Napoleon Lucien Charles, was in exile in the United States, and so it happened that I was born in America on the borders of the Delaware. I came into the world with the last sigh of the old year—that is to say, at midnight on the 31st of December, 1833. I have said that my father was in exile. When he was eleven years old his mother left Naples with her four children—two boys and two girls—and retired to the Chateau de Frohsdorff, taking the title of Comtesse de Lipona—Napoli transposed. There my father lived till he was joined by his uncle, the Emperor Napoleon's eldest brother, King Joseph of Spain, who on the fall of the first empire had retired to the United States and taken a lovely place near Bordentown, N. J., where he lived for eleven years as Count de Survilliers. It was at Bordentown that I entered this sorry world, my father having in 1831 married a Miss Carolina Georgina Fraser of Scotch origin, descending from the old family of Lovat.—Princess Caroline Murat's "Memoirs."

A Shock to Vanity.

"My wife gave me a birthday present that has a tendency to take the conceit out of any man who thinks he's good looking," said the man who shaves himself. "I confess that I have all along had a sort of sneaking idea that I had a little more than my share of manly beauty; that when it came to a showdown I was there with the goods. But not any more. I'm cured. And my wife's present did it. What was it? Why, simply one of those shaving glasses that magnify three times. The first time I used it I got a view of my face that rather startled me. Every blemish, every wild hair under the skin, every open pore, all the minute ugliness that isn't apparent to the naked eye—these things confronted me in all their magnified repulsiveness. I used the glass just once and then accidentally dropped it down the air shaft to the basement below. I don't want to look like a monstrosity every time I shave myself."—New York Times.

The Addition.

"What makes you act so grouchy this morning, Dobkins?"

"Had an addition to my family."

"What? Why, you ought to be ashamed to be gloomy over that! To think that a normal human being should be angry because of the advent of such a cherub! Do you actually grudge a place in your happy home to an innocent creature fresh from heaven, bringing with it the very fragrance of those celestial realms? Do you greet with an unwelcoming chill a small epitome of all purity and sweetness given into your keeping as a priceless though undeserved treasure by a too benevolent Providence? A lovely copy of what fancy feigns the angels to be like—a tiny shred of grace and glory snatched from the"—

A Cow For a Life.

The Ober Gabelhorn is a peak notorious for the dangerous cornices which decorate its upper ridges. Of many accidents reported in connection with it perhaps the most remarkable, says G. D. Abraham in "Swiss Mountain Climbs," was the adventure which befell an amateur and his young guide. In passing along the dangerous final cornice it suddenly gave way under the amateur, and he went flying through space to apparent destruction. The guide at the other end of the rope seemed in hopeless plight, but with astounding presence of mind he flung himself down the opposite side of the ridge, thus saving two lives. The rope cut deep into the snow above, but held firm. The young guide's name was Ulrich Almer. His reward was a cow.

A Horticultural Puzzle.

"It's no use," sighs the nature wizard. "I may as well give up."

"What is bothering you?" we ask sympathetically.

"I got started a few years ago on a whim of mine. I took a head of cabbage and crossed it with a white potato and grew eyes on it; then I crossed that with a cornstalk and grew ears on it; then I crossed that with a squash and grew a neck on it; then I crossed that with a cocoanut and grew hair on it, but hanged if I can figure out what to do for a nose and mouth!"—St. Louis Republic.

Already Outside.

"In the days of the ancient drama," said the pedantic person, "performances were given in the open air."

"What a discouragement that must have been," replied Miss Cayenne, "to the man who insists on going out of the theater to get a breath of fresh air."—Washington Star.

Poultry Pointer.

"I think," remarked the brindle faced old hen, "that I'll go into business."

"What kind of business?" asked the innocent young rooster.

"Well," clucked the old hen, "I may set up an egg plant."—Chicago News.

Begging the Price.

The man whose doctor had advised him to walk downtown in the morning looked scornfully at the panhandler who had held him up.

"You say you want money for your starving wife and children," he repeated. "Well, I don't believe you have any."

"Well, wot of it?" asked the beggar brazenly. "Wot if I am lyin'?"

The pedestrian gasped, but held to his purpose.

"I think you want this money only to buy liquor," he said.

"Wot if I do?"

"In that case you show yourself to be a liar, a vagabond and a drunkard—a man who is scarcely worth saving. But listen. Do you know that the liquor evil is, to a certain extent, its own corrective?"

"Wotcha drivin' at?"

"Just this. Scientists tell us that liquor is killing off the weak and inferior class. In that way you may be said to be doing some good. Do you"—

The beggar held out his hand.

"Stop right dere, mister," he said, "and help de good work along before you t'ink o' somepin' else."—Boston Traveler.

Telephone Blunders.

"Have you any spare ribs?" was the question asked a Portland business man recently, when he took down the telephone receiver to answer a call. For a moment the business man thought he was the subject of some joke, but the sweet voice that asked the question reassured him, and he realized that there was some mistake, so he hastily answered:

"No, madam, I am not Adam, and I am not willing to give up one of my ribs for any purpose."

"Oh, I beg your pardon," was the prompt reply. "I thought I had Blank's meat market."

This incident brought forth a story about the chief of police of Oakland, Cal. Some years ago, when asked over the telephone if he had any brains, he grew furious and said some very impolite things to the lady who asked the question before he discovered that she wanted a butcher shop and not the chief of police.—Portland Oregonian.

A Man Who Knew Everything.

Thiers, the French statesman, was a victim of many whimsies. None had stronger hold on him, says Mgr. Gabriel Hanotaux in "Contemporary France," than his desire to get everybody to recognize his universal competency.

Of an applicant for the post of director at the Sevres manufactory Thiers said:

"He is no more made for that part than I for"— and then he stopped.

"Ah, oh! M. Thiers," said his interlocutor, "you find it hard to say what you could not do."

"That's the truth! That's the truth!" cried the statesman gleefully.

One day Thiers said, speaking of a man who had been raised to a high function:

"He is no more suited for that office than I am to be a druggist. And yet," he added, catching himself up, "I do know chemistry!"

Champion Egg Layers.

Many insects are extremely prolific. All of the order Hymenoptera, the bees and ants, lay large numbers, but they are easily excelled by the order Plecoptera, the stone flies, one female of which deposits from 5,000 to 6,000 eggs. But the champion egg layers are the insects embraced in the order Isoptera, the white ants. Dr. Howard states that these insects are called white ants because they are not ants and because they are not white, but he further goes on to tell us that the females of some of the African species grow to an enormous size, and their abdomen, swollen with eggs, becomes as big as a large potato. The rate at which the eggs are laid is extraordinary, being about sixty a minute, or 80,000 and upward a day.

Rooms to Let Signs In Paris.

The Parisian householder who has more room than he requires does not simply put out a card printed in small type which will lure from across the street a weary man or woman who is in search of "unfurnished," but finds that here are only "furnished rooms" or the other way about. A white card on a Parisian dwelling means that furnished apartments are to let and all who run may read. A yellow card conveys to the passerby the knowledge that unfurnished lodgings are there available.—Boston Post.

When Knighthood Was In Flower.

Mrs. Liteknight—Could you oblige me with a heavy hammer, a chisel, your pincers and half a dozen rivets? Mrs. Knightlight—Certainly. Are you doing a little sewing for the children? Mrs. Liteknight—No. My husband ripped his Sunday coat yesterday, and I want to mend it.

Easier Way.

"Don't you think it must be a dreadful thing to live from hand to mouth?"

"I don't know. I live myself from hand to foot."

"How's that?"

"My tradesman hands out the bills, and my husband foots them."—Baltimore American.

A Terrifying Hat.

When the French artist Benjamin Constant was traveling in Morocco he was invited by the sultan to present himself at court at Fez. The painter's first thought was in regard to his costume. "Court" in Europe was one thing; in Morocco it was likely to prove something different. There was nothing to do, however, but to wear his ordinary evening clothes. He was ignorant of the fact that the Moors look upon black garments as very vulgar, and it was only after his arrival that he learned his mistake. The courtiers smiled openly; worst of all, they sneered. The painter was a man of hasty temper, and suddenly, nettled by their insolence, he closed his opera hat and sprang it open in the faces of the jeering crowd. They scattered, yelling with surprise and fear. The sultan heard the noise and demanded the cause. After he had seen and examined the wonderful hat he gave this oracular opinion:

"If I had lived a hundred years in your country and adopted all your other customs I could never have brought myself to set on my head so hideous a contrivance as that!"

Painfully Explicit.

The proprietor of a certain hotel in Europe has posted up the following warning to his clients:

"Gentlemen who come in this hotel not say anything about their meals they will be charged for, and if they should say beforehand that they are going out to breakfast or dinner, and if they say that they not have anything to eat they will be charged, or unless they bring it to the notice of the manager, and should they want not to say anything, they must order the manager for, and not any one else, and unless they not bring it to the notice of the manager, they will be charged for the least things not, according to hotel rate. And no fuss will be allowed afterward about it, and nothing will be allowed to deduct anything out of it."

After this explicit information there surely could be no excuse for misunderstanding.—Boston Globe.

Deceased was aged 75 years and is survived by several brothers, a widow and several children. Burial was made yesterday. Just when the moon was shining out brightly they retraced their steps to the Witmer home, filling it to overflowing. It was Mr. Witmer's 63rd birthday anniversary and he received the congratulations and best wishes of a host of friends. Many presents were brought by the guests and the evening was spent in good fun, etc. A delicious supper was served by Miss Belle Witmer and a corps of efficient assistants.

John Shadle, of Altoona, spent Saturday at this place. Mr. Shadle is just out of the hospital, where he underwent treatment for blood poisoning. For a time the physicians despaired of saving his life, but now he seems to be getting around all right. His many friends were glad to see him. It will be some time before he recovers the full use of the one hand which was affected.

Just about one hour later after the scare at the blacksmith shop the alarm was sounded, this time for a fire at the home of E .J. Williams, clerk to the County Commissioners. It seems that Mrs. Williams, after lighting her oil stove, had gone up stairs to attend to her household duties, when she suddenly heard her children scream. She at once went down stairs, where she discovered that the oil stove had fallen over and that flames were reaching toward the ceiling. With great presence of mind Mrs. Williams seized the oil stove and threw it into the middle of the road. Aside from a somewhat damaged oil stove and a partially destroyed small strip of carpet, no damage was done. Mrs. Williams deserves much praise for her heroic work.

On Friday evening of last week Robert Hall and his cousin, Martha Logan, drove out to Bush Hollow to visit George Deters. They hitched their horse in front of the house and about 9 o'clock in the evening came out of the house to start for home. To their surprise they discovered that the horse was not there. Robert secured a lantern and started in search of the horse. He tramped through the ridges until 12 o'clock, but no trace of the runaway could ne found. Returning to the Deters home he told his cousin to remain there and that he meanwhile would walk to his home and get his other horse and buggy. Robert walked the five miles to his home, got another horse and buggy and returning to the Deters place drove his cousin to her home. Again starting out to find his horse he searched the hollow, where he found the animal securely tied along the road, opposite the home of Harry Giest. Mr. Giest explained that during the night he had heard a racket in the road and that on investigating he had found the stray horse and buggy. He tied the horse and returned to bed. Robert thinks that somebody wanted a buggy ride, and that after taking his horse they left it untied so as to ward off suspicion. The fact that the horse was all right and that nothing about the buggy was in any way damaged would suggest that there had been no runaway. Robert says that if he finds out who did the trick he will start something.

On Wednesday afternoon of last week blacksmith H. D. Lindemuth undertook to start his gasoline engine and it made two explosions, the second one being extremely loud. Suddenly a blaze shot out and in an instant the engine was a mass of flame. The fire quickly reached the roof of the shop. Mr. Lindemuth had just filled the engine with 10 gallons of gasoline and unknown to him the tank had sprung a leak. Lindv. yelled for help and soon 25 or 30 men responded with buckets, but for a long time the water seemed to make matters worse instead of extinguishing the blaze. It so happened that underneath the engine was a trough, about one feet deep, and into this the gasoline was leaking. H. C. Peters happened to hit the trough with a bucket full of water and this choked out the blaze. Nobody seemed to be much alarmed until after the fire was out except Mr. Lindemuth, for he alone knew of the presence of such a large quantity of gasoline and the great danger to all in the event that it should explode. Had the fire lasted a few minutes longer we might have had a very sad story to relate, for no doubt had the gasoline tank exploded several or more persons would have been killed. It was a very windy day and had the blaze gotten a good start several other buildings would have been in danger. Everybody is thankful that luck was in our favor. Mr. Lindemuth at once telephoned to William B. Rankin and had his building insured.

Lyman Emerick was a business visitor to Bellefonte on Monday. He reports considerable excitement when it became known that another murder had been committed.

Hugh Malone visited his brother, James, at George Thompson's lumber camp on Saturday. He found Jimmy happy and working every day. He says that so long as the timber holds out he never will come back to the mines, but wait 'till the whistle blows and we will see him coming. He has left before this and couldn't stay away.

On Friday of last week William Stine, while attempting to step onto a car, misjudged the distance and fell on the rail. One car passed over his foot, breaking several bones His injuries will lay him up for several weeks, but there is nothing that is bad that couldn't be just a little bit worse, Billy, so just grin and bear and try to look on the brighter side.

When the train came in from Tyrone on Saturday evening the smiling face of Clemson Williams was missing. The disappointment was keen, for Clem works in the woods at Dungarvin and had always come home on the evening train. All things come to they who wait, and wait we did, and when Clem came in about one hour later we all understood the matter. Clem was going some, all right, for he had boycotted the railroad company and had bought a horse and buggy of his own. Its a dandy, and don't forget it. We don't know whether Clem is in sympathy with the strikers in Pittsburg or not, but nevertheless he says that he will pay no more railroad fare.

Still they are leaving the mines. Reuben B. Cronemiller and Fred White have gone to State College, where both have secured steady work. Daniel Daywalt left on Monday for Greenville, Mercer County, where he has a nice position in view for himself and his two sons. Thomas Roop and family are moving to Aspinwall the first of June. Wallace Lytle has been offered a good, steady position in a machine shop in Williamsport.

On Tuesday Paul Tomko returned from a fishing trip. He will tell no one where he was. The only trouble he experienced was in keeping the fish off his hook. In fact, it is said that he had to get behind a tree every time he wanted to bait his hook.

Genuine Sardines.

Genuine sardines are the young of the pilchard. Their name comes from the fact that they are most numerous off the coast of Sardinia. They swim in the spring in shoals containing millions—fish shaped shoals ten miles long and a half mile wide. The sardines are netted and taken at once to the shore. There they are washed, scraped and sprinkled with salt. The salt is soon removed, the heads and gills cut off and there is another washing. Then, on beds of green brush, the fish are dried in the sun. Next they are boiled in olive oil till cooked thoroughly. The packers—women always—take them now and pack them in the tin boxes we all know, filling up each box with boiling oil, fitting on the lid and making the box air tight by soldering the joints together with a jet of hot steam. Sardines are more or less perfect according as they are prepared more or less immediately after their capture and according as the oil they are packed in is more or less pure.

The Young French Girl.

A young French girl enters the theater with her father. She takes her seat directly in front of the privileged American girls "finishing" their education. Her untouched flowerlike face is alight with anticipated pleasure, with a soft vividness of intelligence that could never be cursed with the word "brainy." Her hair is bound with a little old fashioned snood and tiny buckle; a strangely simple evening dress covers the exquisite ardor of her slender body. Quickly four faces, the faces of the overindulged, the overprecocious, the overathletic and the overdressed, turn to study her. There is something to learn in this little French maid, whose eyes never meet a man's, who is never allowed to walk alone on the street, whose unconscious grace envelops her like a veil, who is sheltered like a delicate bird, yet trained to the utmost energy, reserve, accomplishment and usefulness.—Atlantic.

Wall Street Superstition.

Almost all the Wall street speculators are superstitious fellows who believe in charms and amulets. In their pockets they carry lucky coins, a rabbit's foot, a horse chestnut or something of the kind. One Wall street man, much envied by his companions, has a short piece of a hangman's rope to conjure with. Many of the customers in the offices are even more credulous than the professional traders in their belief in signs and omens. There is a deep seated tradition that Tuesday is "low day" in a "bull market" and "high day" in a "bear market." Some persons speculate on "systems," and others employ "charts." Once they exploited a machine in Wall street known as a "market register." It was about as effective as helping anybody to win at Stock Exchange speculation as it is to rub up against a hunchback for luck just before you bet on a horse race.—Munsey's Magazine.

He Got Valuable Information.

The story is told of the times of Aretas Blood and the old Manchester locomotive works that a student came to Mr. Blood once and wanted to study the business of locomotive building in his vacation days. The student came well recommended, and Mr. Blood, who never had much use for these "tech" people, sent him down to the boiler shop and placed him in charge of the old foreman. The old man took the "tech" man around, and in the course of the inspection of the shop they came across one boiler on the inside of which was a man at work.

"How does that man get out?" inquired the "tech" man.

"Oh," said the venerable pilot, "he doesn't get out. We always count upon losing at least one man in building a boiler."—Manchester Union.

Napoleon Obeyed the Mob.

In "The Corsican—A Diary of Napoleon's Life In His Own Words," Bonaparte tells how, as an obscure soldier, he witnessed some of the opening scenes of the revolution: "I lodged Rue du Mail, Place des Victories. At the sound of the tocsin and at the news that the Tuileries were attacked I started for the Carousel. Before I had got there in the Rue des Petits Champs I was passed by a mob of horrible looking fellows parading a head stuck on a pike. Thinking I looked too much of a gentleman, they wanted me to shout 'Vive la nation!' which I did promptly, as may easily be imagined."

Freed His Mind In His Will.

Among curious wills that of a certain Dr. Dunlap, a Canadian, has often been quoted. It probably contained some of the most maliciously expressed bequests on record. To one brother the doctor left his books so that he might learn to read and acquire common sense. To another brother he left his big silver watch that the said brother might know the hour at which men ought to get up of a morning. To his brother-in-law he left his best pipe "in gratitude that he married my sister Maggie, whom no man of taste would ever have taken," and to the eldest son of a friend he left a silver tankard lest if he left it to the friend himself, who was a rabid teetotaler, the latter might melt it down to cast temperance medals. To one of his sisters he left a silver drink cup "for reasons best known to herself;" to another the family Bible, so that she might learn as much of its spirit as she already knew of its letter and become a better Christian, and to his eldest sister a five acre field to console her for being married to a man that she had to henpeck.—Chambers' Journal.

A Pair of Cheerful Liars.

The crowd in the little country store was watching the rain when Deacon Witherspoon remarked that he'd seen it rain about as hard as anybody ever had seen it rain. Somebody said:

"Deacon, how hard did you ever see it rain?"

"Well, sir," said the deacon, "once upon a time, when I was at home, we had an old cider barrel laying out in the yard with both ends out and the bunghole up, and, would you believe it, it rained so hard into that bunghole that water couldn't run out of both ends fast enough, and it swelled up and busted!"

Then Reuben Henry spoke up. He said he'd never seen it rain very hard, but he'd seen some mighty cold weather. Somebody said, "Rube, how cold did you ever see it get?"

He said, "Well, sir, one time when I was living down in Pickaway county, in hog killing time, we had a kettle of boiling water setting on the stove, and we took it out in the yard, and it froze so doggone quick the ice was hot."—National Monthly.

Black Inhabitants of France.

Lying so much off the beaten track, the village of Port Lesne, in the Jura department of France, is visited by but few from the outside world, and consequently this tiny community of men and women of color is but little known. It is not a large village, for its inhabitants number only about a hundred, but every one is either black or copper colored. It owes its origin to the fact that about a century ago the famous negro chief, Toussaint L'Ouverture, was brought from Haiti and imprisoned in Fort de Joux. Many of his friends, all negroes, followed him and encamped near his prison on the bank of the little river Loue. From that encampment grew the village of Port Lesne, and when Toussaint L'Ouverture died more than 100 years ago his friends decided to remain in France. The passing of years and intermarriages have transformed the settlement into a French village of colored folk, all of whom are enfranchised.

Poetry and Pleasure.

The poet writes under one restriction only—namely, the necessity of giving immediate pleasure. Nor let this necessity of producing immediate pleasure be considered as a degradation of the poet's art. It is far otherwise. It is an acknowledgment of the beauty of the universe, an acknowledgment the more sincere because not formal, but indirect; it is a task light and easy to him who looks at the world in the spirit of love. Further, it is a homage paid to the native and naked dignity of man, to the grand elementary principle of pleasure, by which he feels and lives and moves.—William Wordsworth.

Minister—That's right. And what if you told the truth?

Tommy—I'd git the devil.—Toledo Blade.

A Killing Joke.

"I made Dr. Knifem, the eminent surgeon, very angry when I met him one winter day enjoying a spin over the snow."

"How did you make him mad?"

"I congratulated him on his sense of the fitness of things in taking advantage of every chance to go on a sleighing expedition."—Baltimore American.

The Crops.

Cool or wet weather has interfered with farm work in many sections, but has benefited grain crops where planted. Winter wheat is growing slowly but improved in condition during April, and insect damage talk is conspicuous by its absence. Frosts west and north have held back fruits and early vegetables, these reports coming from the Pacific coast, the northwest, central west and parts of the east. Still the feeling is that a large fruit crop is possible, although Oregon reports are of a 50 per cent. apple crop condition.

Spring-wheat seeding is finished in the northwest with a 1,000,000 acre increase in the three leading states. The crop has had a good start despite a slight seasonal deficiency in moisture.

Oats have had a fairly good start, but the area is hardly equal to last year's record planting.

Flax areas are reported short in the northwest.

Corn plowing has been interfered with to some extent in the west, but planting has begun in the southwest.

Western soil conditions as a whole are good, grass lands look well, and pastures, though late, are in promising shape. Texas sends good reports as to cattle range conditions, though reporting rather too much rain for grain crops.

It has been too cool for cotton fruit and other southern crops, with too much rain in the western half of the south, but the week ends with better weather reported at hand. There has been too much rain for cotton and vegetables in southern Texas; but rice looks good. Too much rain has retarded cotton planting from the Mississippi river eastward, and the crop is two weeks late in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. Crop conditions are better in Tennessee, the rains having ceased, but all crops are two weeks late. The same reports comes from Virginia. Bradstreet's.

Money in Apple Trees.

Abram Kenter, a Lycoming county farmer, two years ago lost a pocketbook containing eight $10 bills, and accused a hired man in his employ of the theft. Kenter has an old apple orchard, containing half a hundred trees in more or less of a dilapidated condition, and he has been reading attentively what Prof. Surface has to say of the great results to be obtained from old orchards by pruning, spraying and scraping. He began work on his old trees, and has been already made an ardent convert to the theory that there is money to be found in an old orchard. While working at an old tree attention was attracted by something sticking out from beneath an old robin's nest in the fork of the tree, which looked like a book. He investigated, and found that it was his long lost pocket book containing the greenbacks, in not very good condition, but still redeemable. A pet crow belonging to the family is now blamed with the theft, since the bird is a notorious thief. One of its pranks was to steal a sheet of sticky fly paper, and one of the boys of the family found the bird a helpless prisoner in the stuff in a corn crib where it had taken its loot, and attempted to pick it to pieces, but got stuck on the sticky side of it and the more it struggled the more helpless it became. The moral to this tale of suspicion of an innocent man is obvious.

As to Planting Trees.

This is a question that is frequently asked of Prof. H. A. Surface, State Zoologist of Pennsylvania, notwithstanding the fact it is purely horticultural. As a result of his own extensive experience, he has given the following reply.

"The date for planting trees depends solely upon the conditions of the tree at the time it is planted. If it is truly dormant it can be planted at any time, and it will grow even though the planting may not be until midsummer. If, on the other hand its buds have appeared, or its leaves have started to expand, it will be less likely to live even though it should be planted very early. In planting trees on which the leaves have appeared, it is best to cut these back severely, and remove the advancing foliage, giving the tree opportunity to push more dormant buds, after their roots have started.

It is the custom for extensive nursery men to keep trees in cool storage, and often shipments are made late from such trees. It is safe to plant them even though it may be late in the year. The earliest trees should be the cherry. This is less liable to live if planted late than any other. The peach on the other hand, can be planted very late, and if cut back severely will be in as good condition as though planted early.

The greatest objection to the late planting of trees is that they are liable to have started the growth late in the season, and are injured by being transplanted after the growth is started. The greatest objection to the late planting of dormant trees is that the growing season is thus shortened, and unless the growth is stimulated by good nitrogen fertilizer and cultivation, this may be very feeble, and the tree may not gain strength enough to make it resistant to the destructive effects of the winter. Trees planted very late are quite liable to be weakly and easily winter killed. It is the feeble trees that are thus damaged. The greatest security against winter injury is a strong and vigorous growth of good thick twigs and healthy buds well matured before the severe weather comes. Early planting, proper fertilization and cultivation are the best means of securing this. The first winter is often the hardest winter on young trees.

It must be admitted that the earlier in the spring all trees, bushes and shrubs are transplanted the better it will be to insure their starting right, and making a good growth during the summer. "For this reason fall planting is coming more and more into favor and is to be recommended," says Professor Surface, who practices this upon his premises in setting all kinds of fruit trees.

Roofing Guarantees.

When a maker guarantees his roofing, it merely means that he puts his claims for it in writing, and if there is any dispute afterwards, there are thousands of ways in which the maker can evade responsibility if he chooses.

The makers of Congo Roofing, however, have devised an interesting plan which gives the buyer absolute protection. With each roll of roofing is furnished a Surety Bond issued by the National Surety Company of New York, guaranteeing the faithful performance of the guaratee by the manufacturers. This gives to any possible complainant a Court of Appeals to which he can go, over the head of the manufacturer. In fact, this guaratee bond so pledges that if the manufacturers of Congo Roofing should go bankrupt or close out their business, the Surety Company would still continue to guarantee the reliability and satisfaction of Congo Roofing. The guarantee on the two or three ply is for 10 years.

A copy of the Guarantee can be obtained by addressing the Potter-Hoy Hardware Co, Bellefonte, Pa.

Stranger

A Story Illustrating How Persons Will Hang on to a Theory

By William L. Chew

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

In the central part of the Crow valley was one of those villages that spring up mushroom-like upon the discovery of goid. Newcomers were arriving from the east and from the west. Among those from the west was a man who seemed to have stamped on his countenance "I have experienced a grief." He had no sooner entered the town than he walked through the street—there was only one street—looking at every one he met as though he were searching for some one. He kept this up until he seemed to be satisfied that he had seen every one in the town, then discontinued it.

He was a very uncommunicative man and made no friends. His name was not forthcoming, so he soon acquired the soubriquet of Stranger. He entered a claim and went to work with pick and shovel like the rest of the men in the town. When the daily coach arrived from the east he was always on hand. He scrutinized every person who alighted, and when the coach had been emptied walked away.

"Who is he and who's he lookin' for?" asked one of a knot of men one evening as Stranger walked away from the coach with his usual look of disappointment.

"Want t' know who he is and who he's lookin' for, do y'?" said Bill Stubbs. "Well, I'll tell y'. He's one o' them fellers who's life has been wrecked by a woman and another man. He's been married and another feller has taken his wife from him. It's my opinion that Stranger's expectin' the feller that robbed him of his wife, and when he comes you'll see a shootin' match."

"I don't think much of that explanation," put in Andy Jones. "I reckon Stranger's been doin' somep'n to git himself wanted somewheres. When he fust come yere I tuk notice he satisfied himself afore he settled down that there wasn't no one yere as knowed him; then he entered his claim an' went to work. He ain't tellin' nothin' about himself. He ain't a-goin' to furnish nobody who's huntin' him with information about where he is."

These are but a few of the reasons conjured up for Stranger's presence in the town and his singular actions. The only person who was not interested in them was Stranger himself, but he was the only person who didn't hear any of them. He pursued the even tenor of his way, digging in his hole in the ground and going every evening to the coach to inspect the incoming passengers.

One day Stranger was missing from his hole. His absence at once set every tongue wagging with accelerated vigor. Every one wondered where he had gone and if he would ever come back.

"Where has he gone!" exclaimed Bill Stubbs. "Why, he's got wind of the feller he's lookin' for. As to his comin' back, that depends which man gits the drop on t'other one. If Stranger gits it—and I hope he will—he'll come back, I reckon, and he'll feel better satisfied with himself. Like enough, he may take another holt on matrimony."

"Oh, rats, Bill Stubbs!" exclaimed Andy Jones. "When you git a notion into your head you make everything fit it. Stranger has got wind of an enemy, shore enough, but not the enemy you mean. He's heered that a sheriff has got wind of him, and Stranger's jist lit out to give him the slip. That's the most reasonable view to take of it."

"Seems to me," suggested Enoch Mudge, "that both you fellers is fittin' Stranger's goin' away to your explamtions. I've allus tuk notice that when a man gits an idee into his head he makes all his other idees run that way. Did you ever hear of a out and out Demmycrat turnin' into a Republican or opposite way?"

The remark did not change the views of Bill Stubbs or Andy Jones, who both declared that they were ready to listen to any other reasonable theory concerning Stranger's abuse than their own, but when Mudge advanced one they both attacked it vigorously. He slunk away, leaving the two men arguing with each other.

Then came information that added volume to the flame of conjecture. Stranger returned looking happy.

"What did I tell you?" said Stubbs. "He's met his man and got the drop on him."

"He's dodged the sheriff," Andy Jones claimed.

At this point a small boy spoke up.

"I seen Stranger go into his cabin when he came back. The fust thing he done was to take a piece o' paper from between two logs and tear it into little bits."

"How you goin' to account for that, Bill Stubbs?" asked Andy Jones.

"How you goin' to account for it?"

Since both needed time to make the incident accord with their pet theories no explanation was brought forth. But the mystery of the bit of paper put a quietus upon most of the theories held by Stranger's fellow citizens and was the only event that had occurred during his residence among them that tended to check the formation of new ones.

One day after the distribution of the mail the postmaster gave out that a letter had come for Edward Truesdale and Stranger had claimed it.

"I watched him when he read it," added the informant, "and seen him scowl and give his revolver a hitch."

"Reckon he's gone to meet his man this time shore," said Bill Stubbs.

"I thort you said he'd killed his man when he went away. You bet some un has given him a tip that the sheriff's comin' for him."

"Huh!" retorted Stubbs. "That sheriff o' yourn has been comin' for Stranger ever since he's been in this yere town."

"So's your man that Stranger's lookin' for."

A month passed, and the excitement over the mystery was subsiding when Stranger received another letter. This time the postmaster reported that the recipient had left the room before opening his letter, so that it was impossible to tell how, whatever intelligence it contained, it affected him. Great dissatisfaction greeted this announcement, and a plan for putting in a woman postmaster that had failed was revived. However, nothing could be done to acquire information in the present instance, and the necessity might not arise again. On this account the movement lost force and was finally dropped.

A few days after the arrival of Stranger's last letter a boy rode into town with a telegram for him which had been received at the nearest station, twelve miles away. The news of this message spread like wildfire, and the excitement over the mystery burst into a flame. All agreed that a climax was at hand.

The hour for the arrival of the eastern coach was 6 o'clock. At 5 it was reported that Stranger had gone to his cabin, put on a boiled shirt and had taken up a position half a mile down the road, where he was waiting evidently for the coach.

"He's going to die respectable," said Bill Stubbs—"that is if the other feller don't die instead."

Gradually persons began to walk down the road, halting here and there where they could get a good view of Stranger, who was sitting on a stump. The believers in the Stubbs theory ensconced themselves behind trees in order to escape stray bullets. The Jones partisans laughed at them. Jones had told them that the sheriff was coming, and Stranger had decided to give himself up. He had gone out to prevent his fellow townsmen from witnessing the ignominy of his arrest and the clapping on of handcuffs.

Stranger sat with his back to the gathering audience, not knowing of their presence. He took out his watch and looked for the time of day. Then he pulled a revolver from his hip and examined it, cocking and uncocking it and revolving the chambers.

This act sent several of the doubting Thomases among the Jones faction behind trees and confirmed the Stubbsites in their opinion.

A creaking sound was heard in the distance, and the coach turned a bend in the road. Stranger jumped down from his seat and strode with long steps toward it. Some among the audience averred that he was swinging his revolver while he walked; others were equally sure he had put it back in his holster. As he approached the coach the driver, who recognized him, drew rein and stopped. Then the door flew open and a boy about five years old made a jump that landed him in Stranger's arms. The child was followed by a woman who, standing in the open door, put forth her arms, they were clasped around Stranger's neck, and he lifted her to the ground. The rest of the picture was the man alternately kissing the woman and the boy.

Stranger was recalled to his surroundings by a shout up the road and, turning, saw his fellow citizens ranged in a semicircle between him and the town. He stared at them in wonder for a moment, then put the woman and the boy back into the coach, got in himself, and the vehicle proceeded on its way. When it reached the crowd Enoch Mudge advanced, the driver stopped the horses, and Mr. Mudge addressed Stranger:

"The feelins' of your feller citizens is much relieved. Some thort y' was waitin' to kill a man and others thort y' was wanted for crime. The woman and the kid beside y' p'ints to another solution. Anyway, we're glad the mystery is solved and the woman and the kid are welcome among us. We only hope y're married respectable."

To which Mr. Truesdale replied:

"I married the lady beside me six years ago, but my poverty and the interference of her family have separated us until now. When I came among you I expected to find my wife here. Then I struck a bonanza in my mine. I went away to perfect my claim and get capital to work it, leaving a letter for my wife in case she should come in my absence. Then I got a letter stating that her mother was ill and the coming must be deferred. Lastly, the telegram announced her arrival today. And here we all are intending to make our home among you. I am happy to announce that the Crow Valley Mining company has been organized with ample capital, and I expect it will make a city out of a town."

After these orations the driver cracked his whip, and the stage lumbered on to Mr. Truesdale's cabin. On the site of that cabin a few years later rose a mansion.

Bill Stubbs maintained to the day of his death that he was right in his opinion of the mystery—that some one had interfered with Stranger's affections. Andy Jones declared his belief there was some trouble with the law that had not come out. The others took no further interest in the matter as a mystery.

TWICE TOLD TESTIMONY

Bellefonte People Are Doing All They Can For Fellow Sufferers.

Bellefonte testimony has been published to prove the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills to others in Bellefonte who suffer from bad backs and kidney ills. Lest any sufferer doubt that the cures made by Doan's Kidney Pills are thorough and lasting, we produce confirmed proof—statements from Bellefonte people saying that the cures they told of years ago were permanent. Here's a Bellefonte case.

Mrs. James Corl, 361 E. Bishop St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "A member of my family used Doan's Kidney Pills in 1907, procuring them from Green's Pharmacy Co. and a complete cure of kidney complaint was effected. At that time we publicly endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills and as there has been no return attack of the trouble, we again give this remedy a word of praise. You are welcome to publish this statement for the benefit of other kidney sufferers."

Better buy one good book for the family than three or four cheap story papers. Boys and girls acquainted with great thinkers of great thoughts will not seek the society of loafers or read the frothy, enervating novels.

Whenever you bring a wet umbrella into the house, always set it to drip handle down. It dries more quickly that way; otherwise, which is more important to consider, the collected rainwater rusts the hinges and rots the cloth or silk.

Some think they must have the oven sizzling hot when they put bread in to bake, and then they wonder why a thick crust comes on the loaves, while the middle is not at all well baked. The best way is to have the oven just hot enough so that the loaves will take on a nice brown in, say, ten or fifteen minutes. Don't be in a hurry to take them out too soon, either. An hour is not too long to bake bread to have it just right.

When you pack away hams and shoulder for summer use, be sure that they are well smoked and thoroughly dried out. Powder each piece with pulverized sulphur, slip it into a paper flour-sack, tie each sack tightly, then pack, not too closely together, into a bin or large tight box filled with oats. We pack them each year in this manner in our oats bin, feeding out the oats to the hens as we use the meat. No worms, maggots or other pests attack our meat supply.—Farm Journal.

Scalded and Burned.

Fulmer Bittner, of Mill Hall, was painfully scalded and burned at the paper mill on Thursday afternoon by the bursting of one of the liquor pipes in the digesting room, says the Lock Haven "Democrat." His left hand, and both legs from the knees down were so badly scalded that the outer skin peeled off. His eyes were also injured by the hot steam and parts of his face were slightly burned. This week he is reported as resting fairly well at his home, where he was taken after the accident.

How to Prevent Onion Smut.

The fungous disease commonly known as onion smut becomes exceedingly troublesome in the soil of fields on which onions have been grown continuously for a number of years. The spores of the onion smut live for a considerable time in the soil when this once becomes infected. It is present in much of the onion land of northeastern Ohio, and elsewhere in the state.

The smut affects only onions which are grown from seed, attacking the seedling plants shortly after germination or soon after they appear above ground, and many plants, not destroyed entirely by the smut, are injured to such an extent that they will die later or else develop with an abnormal bulb filled with spores of the disease. When onion sets or seedlings, grown under glass or in uninfected soil, are planted in smut-infected ground, the smut does noi attack them, indicating that the fungus is able to penetrate the plant only through its most delicate tissues.

The smut spores of the disease are spread by cultivators or other implements; frequently by the wind for short distances; on the feet of men and horses, and by decaying onion refuse, which is often used as a fertilizer. The Ohio Experiment Station has discovered and applied a successful treatment of the soil with a formalin solution to prevent onion smut. This solution is made with one pound of 40 per cent formaldehyde (commercial formalin) to from 25 to 33 gallons of water. For old infected fields, it is well to use the more concentrated solution. This is applied best with a drip attachment to the seed drill, and at the rate of 120 to 150 gallons of the solution per acre for field onions and from 500 to 700 gallons for onion sets This application of the folmalin solution disinfects the soil surrounding the seed and thus enables it to germinate and grow to the stage where it is beyond the attack of the fungus. The gains realized with this treatment in the past few seasons have been very encouraging to the onion grower.

The formaldehyde solution tanks and the drip attachment are easily adjusted to the seed drill, and these may be purchased of dealers in farm implements.

Home-made attachments may be made from empty syrup cans inverted, using a perforated rubber stopper in the outlet, connected by suitable rubber tubes with a drawn glass tube point at the end of each. This rubber tube will require a pinch cock to shut off the flow, and the point will need to be set so that the solution falls with the seed before the earth covers it over. The profits from smut treatment where any disease exists are very great, and for this reason the Experiment Station recommends it most strongly.—Country Gentleman.

Linen Bed Clothing.

The majority of housewives think that if bed linen is clean and exhales a faint fragrance of lavender, no more should be asked by even the most fastidious of persons. Yet there are many points about bed linen that she would be wise to take into consideration.

One is that while cotton sheets are the most comfortable in weight, with the coming of the warm weather linen sheets will be found much more satisfactory, since they are far cooler in touch than cotton ones.

Lightweight blankets should also be used in the summer time, and linen pillow cases on hair pillows substituted for the feather pillows and cotton covers of the winter months.

Be sure, too, that you buy bed linen that is big enough for the bed. For most of us have at some time suffered from the inability to pull up the covers without thrusting our feet out at the other end, while a lack of width is equally uncomfortable, especially in a double bed.

Cheap linens are always a poor investment, since they do not wear well and are apt to turn dark in the washing. This is the month of linen sales, however, and both sheets and pillow cases that are a little soiled may be purchased for small prices at the shops these days.

The linen sheets come with hemstitched tops and are most effective, having pillow cases to match. Plain white shams with hemstitched borders and a monogram in the center and plain white spreads are also, by the way, cooler and cleaner looking for the hot weather than the colored ones.

Inspection of Dairies.

The most complete inspection of dairies and dairy herds ever undertaken in Pennsylvania is now under way of inspectors of the State Department of Health. Every county will be covered the next few days. In addition to inspection to ascertain sanitary conditions of property the animals are being looked over and data showing the results will be filed at the Capitol. This inspection is under the direction of Commissioner Samuel G. Dixon, in order that the health authorities may be informed as to cattle and surroundings of the dairies in case of outbreak of diseases. Attention is being paid to the water supply of farms and where cattle wade, in order to prevent pollution.

Mr. Fetzer may be sure that when anything in the line of news turns up he will get it in "The Republican" as soon as it happens.

Curtin Askey, whose ruddy complexion and muscular build suggests that the life of a lumberman is a healthy one, was a genial caller at "The Republican" office on Monday. Mr Askey's home is at Pine Glen, but he spends the greater part of his time in lumber camps and only gets to this neck o' woods when he happens to have a little leisure time. He called to notify us to send "The Republican" to him at Hicks Run, where he will be employed for some time to come in the Lantz lumber camp.

Anybody who has ever experienced the powerful grip of John Boyce, of Clarence, will never forget it. Just how a man could possibly have so much muscle in his right hand is a mystery to us. But it is there, all right, and if you don't believe it, try one of John's old-fashioned handshakes. You may not happen to remember his face or name the next time you meet him, but you surely will remember the handshake. The other day John became a regular reader of "The Republican" and we don't mind saying that we hope that our news columns will grip his interest one-third as hard as he shook hands with the writer some time ago. If this happens, "The Republican" will be a regular visitor to the Boyce home for life. At that, we are not sure it will fully recompense us for the bruised fingers we carried around for a week or two after innocently shaking hands with the genial John.

Although he relinquished the presidency "Dick" will continne active work for the association, having been chosen a member of the Executive Committee.

Fortunately for the large crowd assembled in Garman's opera house, on Friday night, for the Academy minstrels, the fire alarm, telling of a small blaze at the Pennsylvania Match Company plant, was not heard except by those on the stage. Presence of mind on the part of those directing the minstrel show kept the announcement of the fire from the audience until it was known that the fire had been extinguished. The damage done by the flames was slight and fully covered by insurance. Most persons fear, and quite naturally so, that the plant of the match company would be easy prey for flames. According to the management, however, it would be about the hardest place to burn down to be found in town. This is due to the fact that about every ten feet apart in the big plant are large overhead water sprinklers, so arranged that the heat from a fire will release the water.

Monday afternoon, last, proved to be one of the best days for trout fishing experieneed this season. Several large catches were reported. Milton Kerns landed the largest trout of the day. Near the Beezer garage he caught a California brown trout that measnred 16 ½ inches. The trout was caught on a Newville fly. It was too heavy to be lifted over the wall along the creek. A boy climbed down the wall and lifted out the trout in a bucket. Frank Smith captured one of the prettiest trout of the season. Not very far from where Kerns caught his trout Smith landed a 12 inch brook trout, which was full of fight and put up the stiffest kind of a battle before being landed. Samuel Monsell caught a California brown trout early in the evening nearby the Central Railroad of Penna. station. It was a fine specimen and measured almost 13 inches. Joe Thal and Clayt. Brown, of course, caught some fine trout. Joe Thal's string was one of the finest exhibited here this season.

Miss Lizzie Saylor, the efficient bookkeeper in the store of Sim. The Clothier, returned to her duties on Monday after a most puzzling and painful illness. For upward of ten days she was afflicted with what was an almost continuous attack of hiccoughs. For a time it was feared that it might result in nervous prostration, but she finally took a turn for the better and now is enjoying her usually good health.

Of course, it happened. It had to happen. There was nothing else to it. Sam. Bryant is back. Tyrone, the big band up there and the Pennsylvania Railroad, combined, couldn't hold him. With the coming of summer days Sam's thoughts turned to Bellefonte. It wasn't long until his footsteps were in the direction of the old stamping ground, and this week Sam and his family, household goods, and all, returned to Bellefonte. The old dray is to come back to life, the sweet notes of Sam's cornet will again charm old friends and that historic pilgrimage to Tyrone will be but a pleasant memory. Being private machinist to the superintendent of the Tyrone division of the Pennsylvania Railroad is going some, but, as Sam figures things out, it isn't in it with sitting back on your own dray and—and being in Bellefonte.

Hon. Sidney A. Foster,
Sec. R. U. M. L. Ins. CO.,

My Dear Sir:

I have your favor of November 2nd stating that my policy for $1,000 issued by your company is now full paid and I may take a full paid participating policy for the amount of my original policy, $1,000, and receive in cash the surplus, $428, or take guaranteed cash value, $575, and in addition cash surplus, $428, making a total cash value of $1,003, or I may take a full paid policy for $1650. I have paid in premium $735.-20, leaving me a profit of $267.80.

This is very satisfactory to me, and fully justifies the confidence which I had twenty years ago in the then new Iowa company organized by Iowa men, and it is a pleasure to know that the same men continue to manage its affairs. I hereby elect to take a full participating policy and my cash surplus, believing that the participating policy payable at my death is a good investment and absolutely safe.

Hoping for your continued success, I am,
Yours respectfully,

J.L.S.--A.M. JOHN L. STEVENS.
